

From 1849 to 1923, half a million Indian indentured labourers passed through the Immigration Depot, to be transported to plantations throughout the British Empire.

This large-scale migration of the laborers left an indelible mark on our society, with Indians constituting a substantial proportion of our national populations. During this journey, we invite you indulge into the historical sites and discover different ways that Indian immigration has influenced our culture, political faces, religion, cuisine, arts and music.

During the day, you will have the change to discover various temples, including the 'Kailasson' in Port Louis, which is a must to understand the religious impact on our culture. You will also enjoy a visit of the Aapravasi Ghat, which is now part of the UNESCO World Heritage Site. A guided tour in the Capital City will bring you to Indian merchants who still sell spices at the back of the market, as it was the case 2 centuries ago. Lunch will be served in an Indo-Mauritian restaurant where you will enjoy a typical Indo-Mauritian food. The day would not be complete without a visit of the "Ganga Talao" (Grand Bassin), the biggest Hindu temple of the island, built around a sacred lake.
